RESSARECTION OF A DREAM . . .

Massanjore- a small village, a gift of nature with scintillating beauty, situated at Jharkhand, a state bordering West Bengal. This area is rich with tribal inhabitation, poor with health indices and lack of health care facilities in all discipline. Majority population mostly poor, depend on untrained paramedics for their health care needs.

In this backdrop, we have opened our health care facility centre with the help of Bristol Myers Squibb Foundation. We have organized Rural Health Care Providers' training among the local paramedics- this endeavour creates sensation not only in the locality but in the state too. We have also started free clinics thrice in a week with our doctors.

Average fifty to sixty patients in a day attend the clinic from different neighbouring locality for their treatment. After six months of the centre, it seems that it is apple eye to the local people and they are depending more and more on our facilities. It has become an epicentre to the people to fulfil their inaccessible support what they should get in regard to health care.

In this situation, one fine morning, when our class was on, teacher was with the trainees, one old lady with her wrinkled face, walked a long way with her supporting stick, met our doctor and blessed us for our up gradation program to the RHCP as these poor people depends on them for years after years for their treatment and then she told that she came from a long distance to convey a message only. This was "we had long ceased dreaming, now we feel pleasing but painful- will the good time last?"
